Few Knew of It

The event was poorly advertised, and the fact that so few entries were from the Philadelphia Cricket Club in an event which commemorates the memory of one of its popular members shows that even the Cricket Club men were not generally aware of the fact that the event was down for competition yes terday. Under normal conditions no fewer than forty or fifty of the Cricket Club members compete in this annual event, which for years has had its locale at St. Martins. Vesterday there were just five of the St. Martins golfers playing, and when some of the members came out later in the day for their afternoon round they seemed to be surprised to learn that the cup was being played for.
